OBITUARY.

At Palmyra, Wisconsin, Saturday, Sept. 2, of cholera, Chauncey Smith, in the 83d year of his age.

Mr. Smith was born in Farmington, Conn., February 22d, 1772. At the age of 21, he emigrated to Oneida Co., N. Y., was one of the early pioneers that penetrated the wilderness north from Fort Stanwix, (now Rome) and located in what was then called the Black River country, in that part of Mexico purchased by Lyman Ellis, (now the town of Ellisburg) situated on the shore of Lake Ontario, known as Mexico Bay.

At the date of his settlement there was an almost unbroken forest to Fort Stanwix, (20 miles) where he frequently went to procure a physician and medicines for the sick, also to procure breadstuffs for himself and others—it being the nearest point where they were to be obtained—making these journeys on foot by marked trees; the outward trip usually in one day when unencumbered, returning in two more with a bushel of flour on his back, or an equal burden of other necessaries for the settlers; camping with the Indians when unable to reach home, the fleetest of whom he could distance in the chase.

From his frequent intercourse with them, he acquired much of the dialect of the different tribes frequenting that portion of the State, which he ever retained. He was called by them Smith the Long Yankee, from his height, agility and powers of endurance. He ever remained on the most friendly footing with them, unannoyed by those petty villanies which they frequently practiced on the other settlers.

Mr. Smith subsequently removed to Adams, where he married and continued to reside until after the death of his wife in 1837, when he returned to Ellisburg, and remained there with interruptions until the fall of 1847, when he migrated to this State, to reside in the family of his son-in-law, Hon. P. H. Turner, with whom he remained up to the time of his decease.

He was a man of indomitable energy and perseverance in everything he undertook—possessed much of the enterprise and spirit of adventure of Daniel Boone, the pioneer of Kentucky, with an iron constitution, such as few men have possessed. He had a strong and penetrating mind, perceiving and adopting, by intuition, the natural ideas of his country and time, was distinguished for his great firmness and decision of character. He was an acute observer of men and things, ready at all times to divine the motives that impelled his fellow men to action.

He defended his positions, political, moral and religious, with unabated zeal to the day of his death. If honesty of purpose, and kindness, unbiassed by interested motives, will ensure reward, his is secured. With him has been extinguished another of those waning lights, which burned with so much brilliancy and vigor during the last half of the 18th century, and which was possessed in so eminent a degree by our revolutionary fathers.—Jeffersonian.
